LU-MRRL LECTURE SERIES: THE SILENCING OF GENERATIONAL TRAUMA: BLACK FEMALE STUDENTS & GENDER-BASED VIOLENCE IN COLLEGE

Monday, November 22
6:30-8:00p.m. | MRRL Art Gallery

In 2011, the Obama Administration initiated long-overdue conversations around campus-based sexual violence, gender-based discrimination and sexual harassment. Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 requires schools (K-12 and higher education) to develop, communicate, and implement policies and practices to respond to and prevent gender-based discrimination. Over the last 10 years, more and more students have found the courage to speak up regarding their peers' experiences and experiences of their own. However, Black female students are among the population least likely to report incidents, seek help or name their offender. Zakiya Brown is a doctoral student at Northcentral University and dean of students and Title IX coordinator at Lincoln University. She will describe her research findings and the impact of generational trauma on Black female survivors of campus-based sexual violence reporting behaviors.

GIVING TUESDAY

Tuesday, November 30

Library service in our community dates back to 1898 when a subscription library was founded. In 1899, two prominent Jefferson City residents decided to approach Andrew Carnegie in hopes of securing a monetary gift to build the city's first free public library.

Last year, supporters like you, along with matching funds from Central Bank, raised more than $12,000 for virtual services, new online resources, and locker systems throughout the counties.

To achieve the Library's full potential, we need your help. A donation to the MRRL Foundation this year is a donation for the Library's future. Together, we can write a new story. A story we all can tell. A story where the library building finally fulfills its original destiny for a third floor. A story that will continue to unfold over the next 50 years.

Donate online today at <https://www.mrrl.org/get-involved/donate>.
